Mississippi County is located in the bootheel of Missouri and was officially organized in 1845. The county was named for the Mississippi River that forms the eastern border. The Mississippi County Teacher’s Association protected the interests of teachers working in that county. Today, teachers in Missouri are represented by the Missouri State Teacher’s Association, which protects the interests of all Missouri teachers. MSTA divides the state into regions, including, the central region, the greater Kansas City Region, the greater St. Louis region, Jefferson County region, Northeast region, Northwest region, South Central region, Southeast region, Southwest region and the St. Joseph region. The organization promotes state legislation favorable to the interests of teachers and education, offers discounts on basic services teachers use daily, and provides legal aid to members through Legal Services of Missouri. The organization was born from regional teacher’s associations like the Mississippi County Teacher’s association and others like it, believing that one powerful state-wide agency would be more effective in protecting the interests of the state’s teachers.
